M&N Obtains $7.27 Million Jury Verdict in Medical Negligence Case

The Marasco & Nesselbush litigation team recently won a $7.27 million jury verdict against a Massachusetts medical provider, for medical negligence in a case that resulted in lifelong disabilities.

Our client, a wife and mother of three, was 37 years old when she suffered life-altering injuries as a result of a stroke caused by the failure of a medical team to diagnose and treat her severe headache symptoms in a timely manner.

During the trial, Marasco & Nesselbush attorneys, Jane R. Duket and Mark H. Grimm, argued that the medical team failed to communicate our client's symptoms, order proper tests, and diagnose her condition. Our legal team, buttressed by medical experts, demonstrated that our client's stroke and resulting permanent neurological deficits were preventable had proper communication and treatment taken place.

Medical experts testified during the trial that our client suffered a rare Central Nervous System vasculitis stroke brought on by an untreated condition called neurosarcoidosis. The untreated condition caused inflammation of the blood vessels in her brain, severe headaches, double-vision, and ultimately stroke.

Plaintiff's expert in neurology testified that if our client had been administered steroids when MRI imaging provided evidence of neurosarcoidosis, she would not have suffered the stroke and would have been spared from a permanent limp and limited dexterity in her right arm. The jury found that the medical provider was negligent and breached its duty as a corporation.

"We are grateful to the jury for its verdict in this case," said attorney Jane Duket. "It sends an important message that medical service providers will pay a steep price for medical negligence that results in serious and life-long injuries. While our success won't erase our client's suffering, we're pleased the jury agreed with our arguments, held the corporation accountable for their negligence, and provided financial security for our deserving client."

Donna Nesselbush is Nationally Recognized with the Eileen P. Sweeney Distinguished Service Award

On May 12th, in Austin, TX, firm co-founder and partner Donna Nesselbush was honored with the Eileen P. Sweeney Distinguished Service Award from the National Organization of Social Security Claimant's Representatives. This award is presented to those whose outstanding service has resulted in a significant improvement in the quality of advocacy for claimants, increased the availability of advocacy for claimants, or improvement in the Social Security adjudicatory process.

Attorney Nesselbush was recognized for her resilient work on a case won in the 1st Circuit, Marasco & Nesselbush, LLP v. SSA, 6 F.4th 150 (1st Cir. 2021). This 1st Circuit win will guide the federal government in rewriting procedural rules that will help increase the injured and disabled's access to attorney representation in cases against the SSA.

After receiving the award, Donna said, "I am so proud, honored, and humbled to have received this award from the National Organization of Social Security Claimants' Representatives. This case was always about ensuring access to justice for the disabled by protecting their rights to legal representation."
